Mangrara Banua, Tongkonan and The Memories of Toraja people
(Consecration Ceremony for Traditional House in Toraja, South Sulawesi)

Abstract
Tongkonan, aside from being home for Toraja people and as an identity marker, is also functioned as a center of daily activities for Toraja people. Tongkonan could not run it’s function without having an consecration ceremony which called Mangrara Banua. Mangrara Banua is a traditional ceremony held for the recently finished Tongkonan or the renovated one. Ethnographically, Mangrara Banua is not only seen as a ceremony in celebrating the newly built Tongkonan, more than that, Mangrara Banua occurs to recall the memories of Toraja people about their existence as an indigenous people, through the spoken narratives in the ceremony.
Keyword: Mangrara Banua, Tongkonan, Consecration Ceremony, Memories, Toraja people.

TONGKONAN: A Center of Toraja people lifes

“Because a house is the center of everything, for either agricultural activities and stockbreeding, or even marriage ceremony. Without a house, what would a human be? House is the center of everything, place to sleep, to cook rice, or a living place for all existence, either crops, livestock and even the existence of human itself.”

Sentences above are cited from the result of my interview with a Tominaa, one of Aluk Todolo customary leader whom often called Ne’ Tato Dena. Aluk Todolo seen as the ancestor’s religion; in which belongs to the ancient Toraja people and is full of customary rules, prohibitions, punishments, and also methods of conducting the customary ceremonies in this case including Rambu Solo’ (funeral ceremony) and Rambu Tuka’ (ceremonial meal). Within it’s doctrine, Aluk Todolo or Alukta said as a religion inherited by Puang Matua (The Lord) to the first born human, Datu La Ukku’ (Bujis 2009:27; Tangdilintin 2014a:54)

Based on Ne’ Tato’s interview above, the writer begins to understand the specialty of a building which have become Toraja’s pride all this time. A house which for them is not only meant as a building to live in, but rather, more than that, a house named Tongkonan by them is also reputed as human body that became the center of the living (Waterson, 2009:183)

Ethimologically, ‘Tongkonan’ originated from the words tongkon or ma’tongkon in Toraja language which means to sit (Tangdilintin, 2014b:39; Nooy-Palm, 1979:231). Words ma’ tongkon or tongkon for Toraja people litteraly aren’t pointing towards some activities as we generally understand. Literally, tongkon means to sit, to discuss, to gather, to reach for an agreement, a confrence, in which they discuss every sort of problems together to find the solution, or sit – in which they establish customary rules to apply in the society. And as added by Tammu and Van Der Veen in Adams (2006:80), the word ma’tongkon refers to the activities of Torajan people within the grasp of the ceremonial context.

Tongkonan has an important role as a place in where customary ceremonies are held, and at once as someone’s social marker in society. This sense explains that the name Tongkonan for Toraja’s Traditional House is referring to it’s function, not to the physical form or the architecture. Nowadays, Tongkonan has become the identity for Toraja people (Volkman, 1990:92; Waterson, 2009: 195), even though not all of Toraja’s traditional house can be categorized as Tongkonan before identifying it’s function first. Then in this case, what function has to be had by a traditional house before we can call it Tongkonan?

Marla Tandirerung, Toraja’s cultural scientist whom have been keeping Tongkonan Buntu Pune of her Ancestor said,

“Actually, not all traditional house in Toraja can be called Tongkonan, because Tongkonan is a name only for a house with a customary function”

Mangrara Banua for Tongkonan

Role, purpose, status and the prestige of a Tongkonan is not only judged by it’s physical appearances, such as it’s physical form, it’s carving or the number of the buffalo horn attached to each of it pillars, but also judged from the consecration ceremony called Mangrara Banua. This consecration ceremony have become one means to legitimate the status and Tongkonan’s function in society.

Its through this ceremony also, the collective memory or Toraja people will be presented to recall their origins, role, and the status of the Tongkonan in society, along with the generations inherited it. As expressed by Vansina (1985:xi), memory of an oral society has became a vault in which the whole past experience of human is stored, and also can help explain today’s society condition. Memory delivers a culture of society from one generation to another.

Mangrara Banua ceremony, not only function as a media to recollect all those collective memories. It is a prestige to finally complete the building and then performing the consecration ceremony, because for Toraja people, no matter how luxurious a physical appearance of a Tongkonan, without ever having a Mangrara Banua ceremony, the building would only bring shame to the whole family. The duty to perform the ceremony also explained by Ne’ Tato.

“it is an order from our ancestor for us to build a house and so that we can continously be safe and well, we must perform the ceremony. Either for the construction or any other ceremony.

Mangrara Banua ceremony has a different form along with the different rules in each area where it will be held. In this research, I would specially describing one of Mangrara Banua ceremony held for Rampunan Tongkonan belong to Nek Roswita in Luak, Bungin District, North Makale Subdistrict – Tana Toraja, from August 18th to 21th in 2016.

PHASES OF MANGRARA BANUA CEREMONY

1. Manta’da: Self ‘purification’ Before Entering the Ceremony

First day of the ceremony is a preparation phase called Manta’da, which held before going to the main phase (Mangrara Banua). Manta’da itself mean as a ‘cleaning’ process, or as named by Van Gennep (1960:20) as a purification phase, is a preparation phase where all families from Rampunan Tongkonan gather to offer a sacrificial pig for The Lord, represented by the church, in order to ‘cleanse’ or to purify themselves from every mistakes and misunderstanding made during the process in building the Tongkonan.

Tongkonan that is about to ordinate has been decorated with various decorating beads on it’s rooftop. From kandaure (local Toraja’s colorful beads handicraft) attached to every pillar on the rooftop, along with old cloths named sarita – a long cloth which has been passed over generations, and maa (a short version of sarita) as a nobility marker of the owner of the Tongkonan. This cloths only used in a great ceremonies in Toraja, one of them is Mangrara Banua. Every accessory presented in ceremony, is not only a pleasant for the eyes, but also as a marker of social acceptability of the owner of Tongkonan.

Mangrara Banua ceremony for Rampunan Tongkonan held in Christian form as a religion followed by the owner, resulting every phase of the ceremony always started with a religious service. The service starts the phases of the Tongkonan consecration ceremony for the next three days, also as the symbol of gratitude for the finished Tongkonan. This service is aslo as a turning point to start the consecration ceremony, to ‘purify’ themselve from every mistake and misunderstanding during the construction process.

Fot Toraja people, ‘purification’ process at the consecration ceremony is not only valid for the Tongkonan and the neighborhood around, but also for each of the family member whom participated during the whole construction and ceremonial process. This ‘purification’ process is also an entrance door to the Mangrara Banua ceremony.

2. Ma’tarampak: Blood and Party’s Decoration

Ma’tarampak is a phase at the second day of the ceremony to mark the installation of the lower part of the rooftop. Actually, this installation has been done long before the Mangrara ceremony is held. Still, this lower part of the rooftop is re-installed at the second day of the ceremony as the symbol of gratitude. Ma’tarampak at the second day of the ceremony is the early phase of Mangrara Banua or the consecration ceremony of Tongkonan.
Ma’tarampak phase is marked with Ma’pakande Ada process, which is the slaughter of the sacrificial pigs from the first day of the ceremony. Pork slices then distributed to each of the customary chief in the area, such as to parengnge (a noble title back in pre-colonial era: A customary government position to rule above a settlement of Layuk and kaparengesan Tongkonan (Waterson, 2009:474), and tomina (customary leader for Aluk Todolo) according to their role in the custom. Pork slices also distributed to nearby customary Tongkonan.

Literally, Ma’pakande means ‘to feed’, whilst Ada means ‘custom’. This process held as a symbol of the owner’s gratitude to all of the customary chief and the church for their service for the society by giving them certain parts of the porks. Ma’pakande’Ada process started by slaughtering dozens of pig offered by the family. The meat then roasted, sliced accordingly to the custom rules, and then certain parts of it are given to each of the customary chief present.

The distribution of the meat is not only for the participating customary chief in the region such as To Parengnge and Tominaa as the customary leader of Aluk Todolo whom in charge of leading religious ceremony, but also for the church which nowadays taking the role of replacing Aluk Todolo in customary ceremony. Besides being the symbol of gratitude from the Tongkonan owner, Ma’pakande Ada process also held to gain legitimacy of the society for the social acceptability and fot the role of their Tongkonan in the custom order.

3. Massomba Tedong: The Prayer for the Buffalo

Approaching midnight, on the second day of the Mangrara Banua ceremony, a tied up black buffalo on a huge tree east of the Tongkonan is prepared as a sacrifice in massomba tedong process that evening. Massomba Tedong is a part of Mangrara Banua process for Rampunan Tongkonan. This part of process is called Merok ceremony – a ceremony of the highest level of Mangrara Banua, which often marked with the sacrifice of a black buffalo, and can only be done by Layuk Tongkonan whom have held Ma’bua ceremony (a grateful ceremony to pray for wealth and prosper) beforehand.

Unlike the chosen big-striped-long horn buffalos at the funeral ceremony, the chosen buffalo for sacrificial in massomba tedong is a black and short horn (around half of man’s arm) buffalo. As the chosen sacrificial buffalo, it must has eight point-like white spots at it’s skin, only with that condition the buffalo will considered worthy as a sacrificial buffalo in massomba tedong.

Massomba tedong by Ne’ Tato Dena as a Tominaa, specifically for gratitude ritual, held in form of a prayer including praise on the sacrificial buaffalo for all night long. While Adams (2006:249) gave the definition of Passomba Tedong as a series of prayers addressed towards the buffalo; a traditional ceremony related to concecration of the Tongkonan.

In one of the Passomba Tedong’s poem of Merok ceremony, telling a story of our ancestor’s buffalo behalf on the order of Puang Matua to sacrifice itself for the human. Eventhough the ancestors of human and animal were created at the same time by Puang Matua, but unlike buffalos, only human knows how to held a ceremony to worship The Lord. Therefore the buffalos were pointed as sacrificial for the ceremony. This story of the buffalo’s origin became something important to tell in Massomba Tedong ceremony, as cited from Waterson,

Kamu to siulu’ki lanmai sauan sibarrung, apa kami mo torro to lino tu la memala’ menumba langan To Tu Mempa’ta, na iatu ladipenomban, susimo tu kada mistioso’i diomai nene’mu lanmai sauan sibarrung. (Waterson, 2009:299)
You are our brother born from the hands of Puang Matua, but only us, humans, able to held sacrificial ceremony to praise The Lord, and you are the only one to sacrifice; as the order inherited by your ancestor

Massomba Tedong ceremony at that night held at Rampunan Tongkonan, led by a priest from one of the Protestant Church in Toraja. The sacrificial buffalo then released from it’s binding and then marched towards Tongkonan right in front of the platform where the priest standing. Dressed in robe as a ceremonial vestment, and a red passapu’ (head accessory with a pointed part heading towards the sky) on his head, and a spear as a symbol held in his left hand, priest then started to say the Passomba Tedong prayers, *

Kurre tua’na te padang tuo balo’ pole parayanna te padang tumbo kumuku’
Praise The Lord for this universe

Kurre sumanga’na te timpolok maa’ pole parayannate tetuk doti langi’
Praise The Lord for the Maa

to lamban, pole parayanna te darrak to unnorong
Praise The Lord for the Sarita

Kurre sumanga’na te sendana bonga, pole parayanna te tallu basongna
Praise The Lord for the sandalwoods

Kurre sumanga’na to tokonan tedong, pole parayanna pandanan bai
Praise The Lord for the buffalos

Kurre sumanga’na lantang ma’pampang, pole parayanna barung ma’dandan
Praise The Lord for the ceremonial huts

Kurre sumanga’na pangkungan bai, pole parayanna kale’ke karambau
Praise The Lord for the pigs

La tengka tedongpa randan di pudukku, lako tedong ma’buluk aluk, la te’papa dara’ lengko di lilaku lako karambau ma’songgo bisara
I will keep on telling story about the bufalos

Pa torro magiang iko nene’ mendeatammu umpolalan eran di langi’ apa tongkon to malaya’ iko todolo kapuanganmu umpolambanan enda’ to palullungan. Umpolalan ia sibidanganna langi umpolambanan ia
Once upon a time, your ancestors was frightened to climb the ladder in the sky. Instead, they were settling in the forest and proliferate. When human settlement was collapsing, they enter the forest to find lumber to repair their houses. Its at that time they met the buffalo.

Iko mo ladi penomban langngan Puang Di Matua, tedao to tumampa rara 'ta pemala'na to ma 'rappu tallang, pangallonanna to ma' kaponan ao’... The one to be sacrificed and tributed from the whole family for The Lord.

*text and translation by Priest Samuel Panggalo (2017)

Passomba Tedong chanted by Priest Samuel which he confess is a ‘simplified’ form and been adjusted with Christianity context, because at first this liturgy was originated from the Aluk Todolo belief inherited by the ancestors of Toraja people. Its just, as previously explained by Nooy-Palm (1979:138), that some first parts from Massomba Tedong consist of prayers of adoration for The Lord. This matter considered in contradiction with the belief of Toraja people, whom mostly Christian. To ask them to put their faith back on giving ‘power’ to other existence beside The Lord, is just the same as paganism, says Priest Samuel,

“Truthfully, Massomba Tedong original version is Aluk Todolo’s version. But, i have replaced the gods-worshipping part with prayers to The Lord”

In Toraja, either Catholic or Protestant churches were not estabilishing rules to ban certain ceremony or tradition of Toraja people. Nevertheless, the churches are doing their best to ‘modify’ some of the tradition which contradict with their rules. This is exactly what happen to Mangrara Banua ceremony, and even to Massomba Tedong as a part of the ceremony. The concept of worshipping gods and ancestors in Massomba Tedong has been fully replaced with worshipping The Lord according to Christianity. But this modification in Massomba Tedong does not change its role and function as a gratitude in the consecration ceremony.

4. Ma'bumbun Lolo and Ma’bubung: Spectacle of Blood and Flesh

A quite interesting sight in that morning starts the series of ma'bumbun lolo. People marching with pigs placed inside of a box-shaped litter called lettoan, with Toraja’s special carving on each side, colorful Maa attached on it, plus a red-colored leaf on top of it. This march performed by the blood-related family and the descendant of Rampunan Tongkonan.

Every person who came and bring pig, must introduce their parentage, which Tongkonan they came from, or the their grandparents name. By doing so it will be easy to recognize them. Pigs offered can be rejected by Nek Roswita and family as the owner of Tongkonan if they’re not finding themself blood-related with the person who offers them pig. It is necessary so that not every person can claim themselves as a descendant of the owner of Tongkonan (Waterson, 2009:194).

Ma’bubung process as the final part of Mangrara Banua ceremony, start in the middle of the day. Different with yesterday’s ma’bumbun lolo, only few person stationed inside the granary. The service was done together with the prayers as a symbol of gratitude in completing the whole process of Mangrara Banua ceremony according to plan. After the service end, all family members who present to begin the mantanan sendana (sandalwoods planting) at the easter side of the Tongkonan right where the buffalo slaughtered in Massomba Tedong.

Sandalwood is one of few plants beside barana’ which taken sacred by Toraja people. This plants has been associated as a sign of wealthy life, as cited from spoken narrative in Merok ceremony (Waterson, 2009:177),

Kurre sumanga’na te sendana sugi, saba’ parayannate kayu mentengke ianan.
Praise The Lord for the sandalwood, for the overflowing blessing on it’s branch that contains noble things Sandalwood tree planted east of the Tongkonan, will then become the symbol of a grand consecration ceremony, along with Bate’ and buffalo as it’s marker. Sandalwood also taken as a reminder to restore the memory of the whole family, even the whole community of Luak, for the silence and the merry-ness of Mangrara Banua for Rampunan Tongkonan.

Memory of Toraja people, Heritage of the Ancestors

Nurturing Memory With Spoken Narratives

Massomba Tedong narratives by Priest Samuel at the Rampunan Tongkonan consecration ceremony started with a gratitude towards The Lord as the creator of everything that exist. Then the gratitude for every elements of the ceremony such as Maa, Sarita, Sandalwood, buffalo, money, spear, and Keris. This things presented in Passomba Tedong narratives are not just to complete the poem. Every things mentionned are the symbol of nobility, wealth and prosperous, and can only presented in consecration ceremony for the Tongkonan which held an important role in traditional governmen such as Layuk or Kaparengesan Tongkonan.

After paying gratitude for each of the material elements in the ceremony, priest then continues his narrative and start to tell a story about the origin of the buffalo’s ancestor. He start his story as if he is talking with the sacrificial buffalo, delivering story about the terms made by the buffalo’s ancestor with Puang Matua as a sacrificial for human life. Along with sweet praise to won it’s heart, so that every part of it’s body would bring prosperous for the whole family member of the Tongkonan.

On the last part of the prayer towards the buffalo, every part of it’s body made as jewelries for the whole family. Its a sign that every part of it’s body sacrificed as a precious jewel belongs to the family, and pray that every part of it is a blessing flows inside the Tongkonan.

Everytime the narratives in Passomba Tedong are spoken through reading as Priest Samuel does, or through other pure spoken narratives like Tominaa, are the manifestation of a message containing the collective memory of Toraja people, not only about the ordained Tongkonan of their ancestors, but also the relationship between human and buffalo since the beginning or their time.

In his explanation about spoken narratives, Ong (2013:211) revealed that narratives is an important part in primary oral culture for it’s capabilities to bind a huge number of tradition and knowledge in a relatively long, big, and everlasting form, and it’s function to bind thoughts more permanently. This kind of capability is shown by Toraja people in Massomba Tedong. This ceremony is not only keeping the memory of the origin of ordained Tongkonan, but also a great history of Toraja people about their ancestor origins, and their identity as a large indigenous people. Indirectly, this consecration ceremony help nurturing the way of life inherited from their ancestor.

Their way of life is not only about customary ceremonies to held, more than that it’s about the way of life in which they maintain the harmonic relationship between human and nature and The Lord. Through believing the existence of buffalo as a part of the origin of Toraja people, providing lumber for the Tongkonan, and also planting sandalwood at the last phase of the consecration ceremony, they have shown us how to nurture relationship among themselves, to nature and The Lord, through collective memories inherited in their community.

_Mangrara Banua_ as a manifestation of their life’s value, truly originated from their bonds with nature (animals and plantation), among human, and The Lord. Without the presence of those three, ceremonies wouldn’t have survived all this time. Their needs to held ceremonies as a proof of their existence also requires them to honor and maintaining their relationship with The Lord, with other human, and nature as their heritage.

Nurturing ‘Memory’ in Custom and Religious Dynamics.

Consecration ceremony for _Tongkonan_, at the current implementation have changed significantly since Christianity dominates the matters between Toraja people and The Lord. It clearly shown in consecration ceremony for Rampunan _Tongkonan_ in Luak. The shift of the divinity concept, from their faith towards gods and their ancestor as the ultimate sacrifice, became Gods of heavens, also contribute in changing the form of the ceremony.

What can the writer observe from this Christian version of _Mangrara Banua_ ceremony is phases of the ceremony, manifestation of symbols, and sacrificial animal, still consistently following the rules in _Alukta_. Most significant changes in _Mangrara Banua_ ceremony is the form of prayer and to whom the animal sacrificed to. In this case, there are some sort of paradox in doing tradition. At one side they believe in Jesus Christ, but at the same time they still use the rules in _Alukta_ when it comes to ceremony.

In the middle of the collision between their ancestor’s belief (_Aluk Todolo_) with the concept of Christianity in Toraja, there are some people who maintains certain parts of their tradition and does not following the changes. This effort shown in the division of _Aluk Todolo_ into two separate forms, _Aluk_ and custom. _Aluk_ consist of every form of ritual service toward their ancestors and gods. As for custom, consist of rules in holding the ritual and live as one indigenous people. Through this division, Toraja people who follows Christianity as their religion must refrain themselves from every ritual practices that related to _Aluk_, but still bounded with the terms and rules of their custom.

In the case of _Mangrara Banua_ for example, the _Aluk’s_ part is the praise and sacrifice made for their gods and ancestors which then changed into service and sacrifice to The Lord. Whilst the process of holding ceremony in three days according to the role of the _Tongkonan_ soon to be ordained, the types and numbers of animal to sacrifice, and every other established terms in holding _Mangrara Banua Ceremony_ are the case of custom. Custom, as the permanent element in the ceremony, then ‘adjusted’ with the concept of Christianity settled by church in Toraja.
The effort to maintain an element in Aluk Todolo, which is custom, and removing other elements can be seen as a form of negotiation done by Toraja people so that they still can displaying certain ‘memories’ of custom within the constant pressure and impact of egalitarianism in Christianity concept which would like to remove hierarchial system long inherited by Toraja people (Bigalke, 2014:189)

If spoken narratives in Passomba Tedong used as a media to nurture memories related to the origins of Toraja people, and to maintain their relationship with nature and The Lord, then the materialistic elements shown in ceremony such as Bate’, buffalos, pigs, and decorating ornament of the ceremony, used as a media to recall their memories concerned with their social acceptability as indigenous people

Bate’ along with the pa’maluk londong and pa’barre allo, sandalwoods, and old cloths twisted around north part of Tongkonan’s roof, and other decorating ornaments marking the ordinated Tongkonan as Layuk Tongkonan or Kaparengesan, which considered as the most respected and the highest level as the customary Tongkonan in Toraja. Not every Tongkonan that would soon ordinated can wear this ornaments during the ceremony. Batu A’riri Tongkonan for example, as the Tongkonan of the family whom unrelated to the customary government, is not allowed to wear pa’maluk londong or pa’bare allo on it’s Bate’, or to plant sandalwood at the end of the ceremony. If they break that law, the owner of Tongkonan and their descendants will be punished according to the custom rules by the elders. It is much worse if they use buffalo as their sacrificial animal for their Tongkonan’s consecration ceremony. Buffalo in Mangrara Banua ceremony is taken as the highest level of sacrifice which can only be presented in Merok ceremony by Layuk or Kaparengesan Tongkonan at the highest gratitude ceremony or Ma’bua. If the ordinated Tongkonan doesn’t have relation with Layuk or Kaparengesan Tongkonan, then sacrificed animal to present are chickens or a pig.

This materialistic element in Mangrara Banua ceremony is used to recall their memories, that their ancestors are not only inherit them spoken narratives, which record their origin as indigenour people along with their value of life to maintain their relationship with nature and The Lord through planting sandalwoods or sacrificing animals. Another important heritage is social order or social structure which divides the noble family (the elite in Toraja), with the regular people. This structure have been ‘nurtured’ through customary ceremonies, especially Mangrara Banua.

Not only focusing about the materialistic element of the ceremony, processs of meat distributing or Ma’pakande Ada’ and feast, as added by Jong (2013:189, 194) as the most visible form of Siri’ (in concern with honor or prestige) for Toraja people. Jong saw how the portion of the meat shared are vary according to their social acceptability, and names of people to receive it will be called loud enough by the priest through speakers. Therefore, those names would be the center of attention of the people because the portion of meat received will be the marker of their social acceptability. Food sharing in ceremony also become a form of Siri’ that is highly visible during the process. Food sharing in large scale is important to express Siri’ in ceremony, just as the numbers of animal slaughtered, and many other materialistic element presented during the ceremony.

Yet, no matter how big the impact caused by Christianity to change their service in Mangrara Banua, it still unable to change the role of this ceremony as a media to display their social acceptability and a prestige of the elites in Toraja. Eventually the writer would understands that changes made in Mangrara Banua ceremony are limited only to the part where they practices worship or their beliefs to gods and their ancestors through sacrificial animals.

The purpose of the effort from certain groups to separate Aluk from custom so that the hierarchial system that grows as part of Toraja people’s custom was not abolished along with the practices of worshipping gods and ancestor. So that they could still gain access as the top of the elites. Losing their social acceptability, especially as elites would caused them losing control over kaunan/slaves along with the opressing instruments.

Making religion as their reason, Toraja people have abandon all kinds of thing that related to worshipping practices towards gods and ancestors, but still they find it difficult to release themselves from a system that placed them on the top level or the social structure, in fact, choosing it as a part of ceremony that woth to maintain, and must be shown in every chance. Bigalke (2014: 194) revealed, the lines of social structure are not changing, as a matter of fact its lasting, even among Christian followers. To him, this is a form of a Toraja-nized Christianity that is far more powerful than Christianized Toraja.

CLOSING

Blood splash as a mark of consecration now changes to series of prayers. Tominaa with pasappu and ceremonial vestments, replaced by priest with his toga. Sacrices to gods and ancestors replaced with praise and gratitude towards The Lord. Phases of Mangrara Banua ceremony now released from the bind of rules about sacrifice and bloods towards gods and their late ancestors. More powerful ‘force’ from outside which came from the church now taking over the order establised by the indogenous people by using their beliefs towards The Lord, gods, and the spirit of their ancestors.

The impact of Christianity which then grow more powerful and vast in forms of services by Toraja people, caused an abolition of certain practices during ceremony, which requires them to abolish the religion inherited by their ancestors, in order to maintain their ‘collective memory’ that able to legitimate their socual acceptability through ceremonies. Now, phases of the modified Mangrara Banua ceremony have been simplified, still making it as a hierarchial ‘spectacle’ as an absolute element of the ceremony.
Prayers and psalmody as a form of communication between ancestors and their descendants now abolished and no longer become the main part presented to mark the changing of the Tongkona’s status. Whereas a numerous number of sacrificial animals such as pigs, chickens, and buffalo, is being kept as part of ceremony until today. Phases of ceremony which holds hierarchy highs still become their needs. Everything is done with one exception, the prohibition to give any form of sacrifice to gods and ancestors. This caused by the abolition of most part of the ceremony and symbols which mark the relation and communication between human and their ancestors.
